Figure 1*: Premo Kolhi, who rescued Dr. Kumbhar's body from the mob. Dr. Kumbhar's family is kissing his hand to show reverence. (Photo - X)*

Source: News Intervention

Figure 2: A protest in Hyderabad, Pakistan, against the abduction and forced religious conversion of minor girls from Hindu, Sikh, and Christian communities.

Source: The Free Press Journal

Figure 3: Statue of Shah Abdul Latif Bhittai, Bhit Shah. The statue was sculpted by Nadir Ali Jamali. Photo by Emmanuel Guddu.

Figure 4: Mahrang Baloch, addressing a crowd during a protest in Quetta, Balochistan.Source: Aljazeera

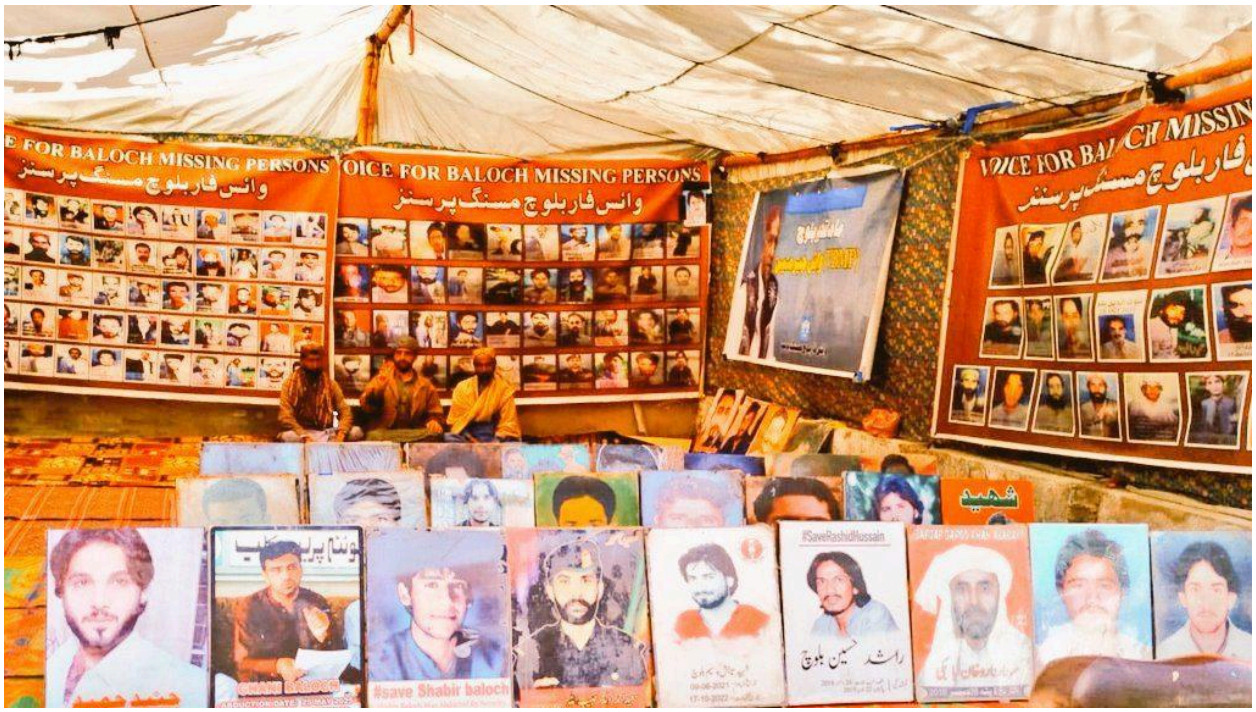

Figure 5: "The protest camp established against enforced disappearances in Balochistan by Voice for Baloch Missing Persons (VBMP) entered its 6,090th consecutive day on Thursday."

Source: Zrumbesh Broadcasting Corporation (ZBC)

Figure 6: "Supporters of the Pashtun Tahaffuz Movement hold signs during a protest [File: Mohsin Raza/Reuters]"

Source: Aljazeera

Figure 7: A protest by the Shiite Muslim community in Pakistan, specifically addressing sectarian violence in the Kurram district and the town of Parachinar. The banners and slogans in the image translate to "Stop Shia Genocide," "Parachinar is bleeding" (پارہ چنار لہو لہو), and "Genocide is unacceptable" (نسل کشی نامنظور).

Source: Jammu Kashmir News

Figure 8: A candlelight vigil held by Pakistani Christians following a violent attack.

Source: The Friday Times

Figure 9: In 2016, the Pakistan Taliban faction attacked Christians by committing a suicide bomb attack on the occasion of Easter. The number of killed Muslims was larger than that of Christians, but the Taliban confirmed they were targeting Christians.

Source: The Times

Figure 10: A protest regarding enforced disappearances in the Balochistan province of Pakistan.

Source: BBC

Figure 11: Seven years later, in 2023, at least five churches and many homes of Christians were burnt in Jaranwala, Pakistan. But this time, the attackers were the local, enraged people.

Source: Amnesty International

Figure 12: The forced conversions of Hindu girls in Sindh are being protested by the Hindus, mainly living in the rural and extremely impoverished areas of Sindh.

Source: The News International